

From the Land of Political Pop

VOICE—The radical Catholic magazine, Ramports, is published in North Beach. Its view of the election: a plague on both their houses.

Clamorous events continue at the University of California at Berkeley. Early this month a series of protests and demonstrations again disrupted the campus. The administration permitted Navy recruiters to man a table at the Student Union. The students then argued that other non-students should be allowed to labor for other causes on campus, and took action in a mass meeting by talking, shoving, and eventually inaugurating a student strike. Coeds were man-handled by police; a policeman later exhibited a bite on his arm allegedly administered by a graduate student in political science. Governor-elect Reagan stepped forth with his instant analysis: "Middle-aged delinquents living around the campus," he said. He plans to appoint John McCone, formerly of the C.I.A. to investigate the campus.
